The bells have not been restored for 140 years and can no longer be rung together in the traditional English 'full circle' style.

When the project is completed, the bells will peal together again as the Lakeland poet, Robert Southey, described in his delightful poem about the bells of St Michael's Church at Church Brough:

*"When such exultant peals were borne
Upon the mountain air.
The sound should stir his blood, and give
An English impulse there"*
